Book Condition: New. Publisher/Verlag: Springer Netherlands | Villa Colombella Papers | Villa Colombella Papers | I. Until about a dozen years ago, the economic analysis of the relationship between political preferences and political demands was a rather straightforward, if dull, subject. The most common assumption was that the only political instrument available to citizens was the vote. Given this assumption, the analyst could express the outcome of the voting process in one of two ways. One possibility was to make the heroic assumptions necessary to obtain the median voter theorem, in which case, the political demands of the citizenry are simply the preferences of the median voter. The alternative was to make Arrow's Impossibility Theorem in which case even though individual preferences are well ordered, no collective preference function exists. On either of these approaches, institutions such as interest groups, political parties, or the structures of political representation played no role in the analysis. The work of "Chicago" scholars especially George Stigler, Gary Becker and Sam Peltzman took a different approach and emphasized the importance of organization in making political demand effective, shifting the focus from voting to political "pressure" by interest groups. However, in these models, voting as an instrument of political action simply disappears and the relationship between interest group pressures and electoral processes has never been clarified. | Introduction. Part One: Unsatisfied Political Demands. Unpopular Policies and the Theory of Representative Democracy; P. Salmon. Equilibrium Political Inaction in a Democracy; P. Howitt, R. Wintrobe. Part Two: Bridges between Demand and Supply. A Theory of Demand for Governmentally Supplied Goods and Services; A. Breton. Organized Groups and the (Mis?)transmission of Public Preferences; R. Young.
