Not illustrated. 1858 edition. Excerpt: . Dr. Bouttatz, when at Gottingen, A. D. 1799, talked of settling as an Oculist in London, but I have long since lost sight of him, and my hope is that he may have returned to his native city; where, from having less opposition to encounter, his dexterity in performing the most delicate operations would be more sure of finding its merited reward. Before I quit the present subject of tumours, I am tempted to advert, somewhat at length, to a case which occurred in my own practice; on account not only of its appropriate interest, but because it will serve as a good example likewise of Abernethy s peculiar style of lectures, and its impression on the memory of his pupils. What can be the cause of the dreadful situation in which you find me? was the earnest question of a patient upon...
